Feb 27 2017 02:16PM UTC

Although the video first appeared to be an innocuous demonstration of a situation in which nature prevailed over machines, later reports have claimed that the park in which the tigers in the video are being kept has been implicated in the tiger bone and wine trade and that the animals are being kept in less-than-satisfactory conditions. According to BIG CAT RESCUE, the footage appears to have been filmed at Harbin Siberian Tiger Park in Heilongjiang province, not a refuge but a tiger farm. Susan Bass, a spokesperson for the accredited animal sanctuary commented : This is sad. These tigers are doomed.

Heres the shocking reason why you should stop sharing the viral video of tigers

Feb 26 2017 11:16AM UTC

This tiger farm, as reported by McClatchy, keeps animals in deplorable conditions and merchants openly sold bone wine, despite a 1993 ban by China on bone products sourced from both domesticated and wild tigers. Underscoring the cruel treatment of animals under Chinas wildlife law, Toby Zhang a Chengdu-based researcher for Animals Asia Foundation, a non-profit organisation said to McClatchy, Chinas wildlife law has all kinds of problems. It effectively encourages people to breed tigers and other animals and use their parts for commerce.Revealing other animal atrocities that go unchecked in the Harbin Siberian Tiger Park, BIG CAT RESCUE, a famous accredited sanctuary dedicated to abused and abandoned big cats, reports, visitors have the unique opportunity to sentence hapless farm creatures starting at RMB 50 for a chicken and going up to RMB 1,500 for a cow to becoming tiger feed. It may seem cruel to the farm animals that are unceremoniously dumped out of a food truck into the middle of 10 insatiable Siberian tigers but it certainly makes the tigers very happy. Well, in a world already rife with instances of animal cruelty, this appalling news wriggling out of this so called.

Per BIG CAT RESCUE the farm has disguised itself as an animal rescue to the public since 2010 at least. The same farm was scrutinized earlier this month for similar images of obese tigers; animal activists raised serious concerns about how the animals were being fed and treated.

He quickly graduated from feeding the big cats to saving their lives - though admits carrying out the surgery does come with some risks. Dr Boorstein said: 'I get asked what it feels like to be that close to a big cat, it's intimidating and scary. But when I do a procedure comparing a small cat to a big cat, they're almost identical. "The biggest difference is if the big cat wakes up it could kill me and people around me, so it can be a very dangerous job and one where you don't want to make any mistakes.' BCR rehabilitates and rescues a huge variety of big cats, including tigers rescued from circuses, lions. from other centres that have been shut down and bobcats who have lost fights with cars, so Boorstein's days are rarely dull. He said: 'So my basic tasks at BIG CAT RESCUE are not only surgery but basic wellness care, going from vaccines all the way to - one of the most common things we deal with - dental disease.' One of Dr Boorstein's most memorable - and delicate - cases involved Hoover the tiger and his penis. Hoover came to BCR after he was rescued from a cruel travelling circus in Peru. Despite being in perfect health, Hoover's penis ended up stuck out of its sheath, which can lead to it drying out and even dying in some cases, so Justin sedated and neutered the cat.

Getting up close to a lion or tiger is a terrifying prospect for most people. But it's a daily occurrence for vet Dr Justin Boorstein, who regularly performs life-saving operations on big cats. He has worked his way up from being a volunteer who fed the animals 10 years ago to become one of the star vets at the BIG CAT RESCUE sanctuary in Tampa, Florida. Dr Justin Boorstein, from Tampa, Florida, regularly performs life-saving operations on big cats. He is pictured operating on a tiger at the Big Cat Rescue sanctuary. The vet, pictured preparing to operate on a large female tiger, began as a volunteer who fed the creatures at the center. Dr Boorstein admits that his job can be a dangerous one, but says the actual operations are almost "identical" to those performed on small cats. He said: 'I get asked what it feels like to be that close to a big cat, it's intimidating and scary. "The biggest difference is if the big cat wakes up it could kill me and people around me, so it can be a very dangerous job and one where you don't want to make any mistakes.' BIG CAT RESCUE rehabilitates and rescues a huge variety of big cats, including tigers rescued from circuses and bobcats who have been hit by cars. Dr Boorstein is now one of the star vets at BIG CAT RESCUE, which rehabilitates and rescues a huge variety of big cats, including tigers rescued from circuses. The vet, who is seen preparing a sedated lion for treatment, admits his job can be dangerous and 'one where you don't want to make any mistakes.' He says it can be 'intimidating' being so close to the big cats he operates on, including this sedated leopard (pictured). The center also provides basic care for the big cats, ranging from vaccines to treating dental disease. Dr Boorstein says his days are never dull, with one of his most memorable cases involving a tiger's penis.

Dr Boorstein said: 'Zeus had been having some episodes where he seemed uncomfortable and he walked a little bit funny.' 'He shouldn't have anything in his stomach but there was a lot of something in his stomach. Upon exploring him we actually found mostly leaves and hair, and a whole lot of it, probably about a softball size or more. Dr Boorstein (pictured before he qualified as a vet) began volunteering at the BIG CAT RESCUE ten years ago, starting off by feeding the animals. The vet, pictured performing dental work on a cougar, jokes that the big cats do not show much appreciation for his hard work. Dr Boorstein says his days are never dull due to the variety of cases that he works on at the center. Pictured is a serval. 'We're just going to let him recover in the hospital and we're definitely going to keep a camera on him in the future to see if he's eating a lot of plant material. If he is we may have to figure out a way to keep him from doing that.' While humans are grateful for the important work their surgeons perform on them, the big cats have not shown much appreciation for the vet's hard work. Dr Boorstein said: 'Some people ask, do I go back and revisit the cats that I've helped out. "All my cats that I've dealt with, that I've had to sedate a lot and fix and now they're doing better, they hate me probably more than anybody on the property. "You would have hoped that they're appreciate but they're not appreciative at all, they just wanna eat me.' Dr Boorstein (pictured right) performs an ultrasound on a sedated white tiger at the BIG CAT RESCUE center Dr Boorstein, who volunteered at the sanctuary before he qualified as a vet, is pictured with a pair of cougars at the center. Animals rehabilitated by the center include tigers rescued from circuses and bobcats who have been hit by cars

The Really Sad Truth Behind This Viral Video Of Tigers Attacking Drone

Science journalist John R Platt took to twitter to say: Reminder: China has an estimated *7* wild tigers left. Many more in this video = obviously a tiger farm. They'll be turned into bone & wine <https://t.co/7hxmksDei2> - John R Platt (@johnrplatt) February 23, 2017 And, according to BIG CAT RESCUE the park has been running as a legit animal rescue park, open to tourists, for some time. A report from the Environmental Investigation Agency in 2013, named Harbin as one of the biggest tiger breeders in the country, but they're not doing this for conservation - they're actually breeding the animals for their meat, pelts and bones, which can be turned into something called 'bone wine'. Bones and meat are worth big bucks, being used in traditional medicine, while the skins are sold for clothes and fashion accessories.

Feb 23 2017 08:29PM

But like so many good things online, this viral video is actually bad. John R. Platt, a science journalist, was the first to recognize the true origin of the footage: a tiger slaughter farm in northeast China called "Harbin Siberian Tiger Park." The full video was uploaded yesterday by Russia Today. The tiger farm, according to BIG CAT RESCUE, has operated under the guise of an animal rescue for some time. Busloads of tourists are given the rare opportunity to gawk at fearsome felines that would otherwise rip your face off. But Harbin Siberian Tiger Park also specializes in contraband like tiger bone, meat, pelts, and a speciality called "bone wine." A visit by McClatchy investigative reporters "found animals in deplorable conditions merchants openly sold bone wine, despite a 1993 ban by China on bone products sourced from both domesticated and wild tigers.

The taxidermist told her he planned to club the cub to death in the parking lot, then stuff the body and sell it as a den decoration. She won the auction, then made it her mission to help abused and abandoned big cats. The 70-acre wildlife refuge known as BIG CAT RESCUE in Tampa serves as an embodiment of that mission. Its home to about 80 wildcats, including 24 bobcats, 18 tigers, 12 servals, six leopards and three lions. We call ourselves an old-age home for cats, said Susan Bass, who directs the rescues marketing efforts. BIG CAT RESCUE advocates for a federal ban on private ownership of big cats such as lions, tigers and leopards, she said. Staff operates with a hands-off philosophy intended to make the cats feel like theyre in the wild as much as possible. Theres no way we can emulate what they would be doing in the wild totally, Bass said.

Type What's inside the \$30,000 gift bags being handed to stars at the GRAMMY Awards 2 Feb 2 2017 09:56AM UTC

But this year the bar has been set even higher, with the contents of each swag bag said to be worth a whopping $30,000. We've taken a look back at what was handed out last year to get an idea of the sort of things stars could be taking home with them this time. Bruno Mars is also among the star-studded guest list (Photo: Rex Features) Among the lavish items were a Tools by Gina hairstyling tool worth $250, Belldini clothing worth more than $300, a virtual reality headset worth $89, a tour of a BIG CAT RESCUE centre worth $500, a gift certificate for. custom cocktail company The Natural Mixologist worth a huge $2,250 and a plastic surgery gift certificate for a massive $5,500. The goody bag also included the likes of a $125 wallet, pet shampoo and conditioner worth $73.80 and a Flos Floris snap back hat costing $130.

make it stop? PETA, HSUS and other non charity organizations filled with Fanatical Animal Rights Extremists/Terrorists should have their Not for Profit status revoked. That would include zoos and sanctuaries that do not provide good conservation of animals but instead, promote against animal usage such as BIG CAT RESCUE (BCR) and/or lie to the general public about the animals they claim to rescue where animals are actually living in sub-standard conditions and receiving poor. health care. The USDA/APHIS inspectors are going out there and rather than promoting their regulations are destroying businesses with the improper usage of those regulations which in and of itself is unconstitutional as a means of enforcement; even taking animals from their longstanding rightful owners. The USDA/APHIS is sending the wrong message including suspending owners or taking away required permits allowing for business to continue with their animals. Laws and regulations are to be enforced equally yet, the agency is ignoring the very same issues at an 'animal sanctuary' doing the very same business as a zoo yet has no conservation purpose. Does anyone actually believe that BCR could exist without joining GFAS (Global Federation of Animal Sanctuaries/HSUS) or could even exist in another state like California? People are sadly mistaken-California laws were created to prevent those types of business practices. And although animals have been sent to BCR by the Ohio Department of Agriculture, BIG CAT RESCUE doesn't even come close to the Ohio newly created animal regulations-How's that for an oxymoron!Governor Kasich is a (lame duck) governor who was greatly involved in the creation of the new regulations in Ohio but has backed away from seeing that enforcement is operating legally and not following procedures dictated by constitutional law. Already the regulation of captive born and raised privately owned animals has cost state and federal taxpayer millions and the economic impact greatly effecting the economy.
