This Hilarious Video Shows Two Lynx Yelling At Each Other Like Humans

According to the Humane Society of the United States (HSUS) 2011 report on the foundation, employees sprayed the cats in the face and eyes with vinegar if they became stressed by the constant handling that they hid when they heard cars coming up the driveway. They were being chained down for photo opportunities, and to do to that! They couldn’t get close to the cats. Carole Baskin, CEO of BIG CAT RESCUE, said that BIG CAT RESCUE is an organization that assisted with the cats eventual rescue and relocation in 2007 that we could sedate them and they would survive.

Biologist and lynx expert Kim Poole of Aurora Wildlife Research in Canada told Buzzfeed that it could have been a territorial dispute: The timing is a bit odd, as they are not breeding, which generally occurs in late March. It is difficult to tell sex but they could be adult males that are having a territorial discussion. Another animal is a nearly grown kitten with its mother, who may be encouraging it to hunt: She’s telling him there’s no free lunch anymore. So it could have been either lynx fighting to the death, not breeding, which generally occurs in late March. It is difficult to tell sex but they could be adult males that are having a territorial discussion. However, another animal is a nearly grown kitten with its mother, who may be encouraging it to hunt: She’s telling him there’s no free lunch anymore. So it could have been either lynx fighting to the death.
